Family Connection Center

Research

Research shows the benefits of parent training can include long-lasting behavior changes, improved parent-child relationships, optimized intervention intensity, and generalization.

(Leaf, et al., 2020)

About

Using the principles of Applied Behavior Analysis, staff will work with families of students with autism (or other related disabilities) through five one-hour empowerment sessions to target specific behaviors of concern in the home and community.

Behaviors

The Family Connection Center will work with families to identify a behavior of concern. Behaviors can include, but are not limited to: stereotypy, toilet training, communication, play/social skills, independence, food tolerance, self-harm, and aggression.
